

Records of the General Assembly, 1636-2005
State Archives Record Group No. 002

History

The General Assembly is Connecticut's legislative body. The General Court of Massachusetts' commissioned a group of eight leaders "to govern the people at Connecticut" for the year beginning March 1636. This group was also known as the General Court.

The Fundamental Orders of 1639 provided for all freemen of the colony to elect a governor, six magistrates, and four deputies from each of the three towns. As new towns organized, the number of deputies grew as well. The Charter of 1662 provided for the elected positions of governor, deputy governor, twelve assistants, and two representatives from each town.

In March 1662/63 and on several later dates, the General Court passed acts allowing a group of Assistants to act in emergencies when the General Court was not in session. The Assistants became the governor's council which, by an act of October 1698, became the Upper House, while the deputies elected by the towns constituted the Lower House. After this formalization of the two bodies, new legislation required concurring action by both houses.

For many years the General court also served as the colony's and later the state's highest judicial court as well as a probate court. It did, however, establish lower level courts: the Particular Court, 1638, the Court of Assistants and County Courts, 1665-1666; separate probate courts, 1698; the Superior Court, 1711 and the Supreme Court of Errors, 1784. The Constitution of 1818 established a specific separation of judicial, executive, and legislative powers.

The present Constitution, adopted in 1965, provides for a Senate of 30 to 50 members and a House of Representatives of 125 to 225 members. Elector in each respective senatorial or assembly districts chose each member for two-year terms. The legislature holds regular length sessions in odd-numbered years, and shorter session in the even-number years. It conducts its business through a system of joint committee comprised of members from both houses.

Scope and Content

This group consists of the official records of the General Assembly and its committees except for the individual bill files including hearing transcripts. Researchers will find those records in Law and Legislative unit of the State Library. The offices of speaker and president pro tempore have only recently begun to place their records with the State Archives. These files include constituent correspondence, reports, memos and other informational documentation. Some committee files including official minutes and correspondence have also come to the State Archives in recent years.

Provenance

The early records in this group came to the Archives in many transfers of various sizes from the office of the Secretary of the State, who is responsible under the Constitution for the "safe-keeping and custody of the public records and documents." The official files of proposed legislation and resolution still come through the Secretary of the State's office.

The General Assembly is exempt from the Public Records Act that governs documentation created in the executive branch. Many committee records and members files have been lost. Some recent transfers of committee records and leadership files have come directly from the members and staff.

Related Record

Many General Assembly records are available in published form. The series listed below indicate if a published version exists. The State Library also has bound copies of Senate and House proceedings since 1945 and transcripts of standing committee hearings since 1943. For records of the State Constitutional Convention of 1965 see RG 6, Secretary of the State. Other early General Assembly records are available in RG 1, Connecticut Archives.
